The Lizzie Robinson House is located in a residential area in northeast Omaha. The 1-1/2 story frame house on the north side of Corby Street was built in 1910. It is of a simple temple-form style with an intersecting gable and a projecting bay on the east side and an intersecting gable on the west. What was probably originally an open porch is now enclosed. The house has clapboard siding and an asphalt shingle roof. Aluminum combination storms have been added to all windows, and metal awnings have been placed over the main entrance and the second-story double-window.

The integrity of the house is good. Some changes have occurred with the probable enclosure of the porch and the addition of two metal awnings and the aluminum storm windows. Other features (the siding, the pattern of the windows, the shape of the house) appear to be the same as they were at the time of the house's construction.

The property includes one non-contributing building, a contemporary garage, located to the rear of the house.

The residence at 2864 Corby Street is significant under National Register Criterion B, association with the lives of persons significant in our past, because it is the only extant building in Omaha associated with Mrs. Lizzie Robinson. Lizzie Robinson and her husband Reverend Edward D. Robinson resided at 2864 Corby Street with their daughter from 1916 to 1924. In 1916, Edward and Lizzie Robinson founded the Church of God in Christ in Omaha, the first church of that denomination in the state of Nebraska. Mrs. Lizzie Robinson is significant historically for her role as national organizer of the women's ministry for the Church of God in Christ, the largest African American Pentecostal denomination in the world. Many of the denomination's early pioneers stayed at 2864 Corby Street when they visited Omaha. Criterion Consideration "A" is applicable and is met through the property deriving significance for its association with a person important in religious history.

The Pentecostal movement's roots trace back to the economic, social, and cultural crises of the late nineteenth century, when events such as industrialization, rapid urban growth, and changes in Protestant denominations caused major changes in people's lives. Pentecostalism was also influenced by ideologies from other religious movements emerging during that period. The Wesleyan movement contributed the concept of sanctification and--crucial to the formation of Pentecostalism--the baptism of the Holy Spirit and fire. The latter concept is attributed to a lay Baptist preacher in Nebraska named Benjamin Hardin Irwin. The second influence was the Reformed emphasis upon power for service, an endowment of power that enabled a Christian to witness, sacrifice, and serve. The third concept was the Plymouth Brethren's belief in dispensational premillennialism--the idea of an imminent secret rapture of the saints, immediately followed by seven years of Great Tribulation, the Second Coming of the Lord, and the Millennium. The final contributor was a new theology of faith healing. The Pentecostal adamance on speaking in tongues as a sign of baptism finally separated Pentecostals from the main body of the holiness movement.1

In 1905, William J. Seymour, the most enigmatic major figure in the early history of Pentecostalism2, attended a Bible school in Houston and, in 1906, brought those teachings to a black holiness group that (a short while later) met in an abandoned warehouse on Azusa Street in Los Angeles. At first, the Azusa revivals were

...eventually, they were exclusively black. The Azusa Street revival had a strong influence on its participants, an influence instrumental in the formation of the Pentecostal churches. In the United States there are more than three hundred Pentecostal denominations. Two of the largest denominations are the Assemblies of God and the Church of God in Christ.

The Church of God in Christ is the largest African American Pentecostal body in North America, headquartered in Memphis, Tennessee. The church was founded in 1907 by Charles H. Mason, one of the most significant figures in the rise and spread of the modern Pentecostal movement. Mason was a Missionary Baptist minister who, in 1895, organized an independent congregation in a cotton gin shed in Lexington, Mississippi. Two years later, in Jackson, Mississippi, C.P. Jones instituted a series of annual Holiness convocations that Mason, J.A. Jeter, and other former Missionary Baptists attended. Jones, Mason and Jeter then preached together for several years, eventually establishing a congregation in Memphis.

In 1907, Mason attended the revival meetings at Azusa Street and accepted those beliefs. Mason returned from Los Angeles to find that a Pentecostal revival had already begun in Memphis; however, Jones and Jeter did not agree with the new teachings. The two groups parted that year. By 1911 Jones and Jeter's group reorganized, taking the name the Churches of Christ (Holiness) U.S.A. The congregations that supported Mason reorganized in the fall of 1907 as the Church of God in Christ, with Mason as general overseer and chief apostle (bishop). Until 1914, the Church of God in Christ was interracial. By ordaining ministers of all races, Mason performed an unusually important service to the early twentieth-century Pentecostal movement. He appears to have been the only early convert who came from a legally incorporated church body and who could thus ordain persons whose status as clergymen was recognized by civil authorities. As a result, scores of white ministers sought ordination at the hand of Mason. Large numbers obtained credentials carrying the name COGIC. In the years 1909-14, there were as many white Churches of God in Christ as there were black, all carrying Mason's credentials and incorporation. On December 20, 1913, elder E.N. Bell and H.A. Goss issued a call to convene a general council of "all pentecostal saints and Churches of God in Christ," to meet the following April at Hot Springs. This invitation went only to the white saints. E.N. Bell's periodical, Word and Witness, was not distributed in the black religious community. On the first week in April 1914, Mason traveled to the Hot Springs convention to invoke God's blessing on the newly formed General Council of the Assemblies of God.

By 1934 the Church of God in Christ consisted of 345 churches in twenty-one states and the District of Columbia, with more than 25,000 members. Rapid growth continued, with membership increasing to 382,679 in 1962. The church reportedly had 3,709,661 members in 52 countries by 1982.

The Church further developed when Mason organized the Women's Department, the Sunday School and the Young Peoples Willing Workers (YPWW) between 1910 and 1916. These departments needed people to run them, and Lizzie Robinson was recommended to Charles Mason as qualified to supervise the Women's Department.

Lizzie Robinson was the first National Supervisor of the Women's Departments of the Church of God in Christ, serving from 1911 through 1945. She was born a slave on April 5, 1860, in Phillips County, Arkansas. Her mother, a widow with five children, could not read but did send her children to school. Lizzie Robinson read the Bible to her mother's friends from ages eight to fifteen years, when her mother died. In 1881 she married Mr. Wood. In 1892 she joined the Baptist church at Pine Bluff, Arkansas. In 1901, at the age of 41, Lizzie Wood attended the Baptist Academy in Dermott, Arkansas to finish her education and remained there...

as matron of the school. There she became acquainted with the Church of God in Christ and with Charles Mason. Lizzie Wood then left the Baptist church and worked for the Church of God in Christ in Trenton and Jackson, Tennessee. Charles Mason appointed Lizzie Wood Supervisor of the Women's Department in Memphis, Tennessee in 1911. She formed the Prayer and Bible Band, the Sewing Circle, and the Home and Foreign Mission Board.

During this time she met, and later married, Edward Robinson, a minister. Edward and Lizzie Robinson were evangelists in western United States until they settled in Omaha and founded a church there in 1916. They lived with her daughter, Ida Baker, and her husband Archie at 2864 Corby Street from 1916 until 1924, when the Robinsons purchased a house at 2723 North 28th Avenue. Ida and Archie Baker moved to Omaha in 1912.

The Robinson's church was the first Church of God in Christ in the state of Nebraska. Shortly after their arrival in Omaha, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson began holding afternoon and night services near 27th and Lake Streets. These services attracted many people, and the Robinsons soon organized a church. The church was approved by the Bishop the following year. The congregation continued to grow, requiring the purchase of a new church site to provide more space. In 1920, the church purchased the property at 2318 N. 26th Street and remodeled the building on that site for use as a church. The Church of God in Christ was officially incorporated in 1925, with Edward Robinson as pastor. The Robinson's son-in-law, Archie Baker, was one of the first members of the Board of Trustees.

Lizzie Robinson chose women to accompany her on her evangelical trips after her husband stopped traveling because of his duties with the church. The women's work grew so rapidly that Lizzie Robinson began state organizations, and the women who had accompanied her became the first State Mothers. Her daughter Ida then became her traveling companion and assistant, eventually becoming the Secretary-Treasurer of the Home and Foreign Mission Department. Her husband, Rev. Edward D. Robinson, died in 1937 at the age of 77. From 1940 through 1945, Lizzie Robinson ran the program through the State Mothers. She took a great interest in the building of the National Headquarters in Memphis, Tennessee and organized National Drives to raise funds. The assembly hall in the new building was named after her. During her years of service, Lizzie Robinson established an auxiliary program through the local churches and had begun to build the State and National program. She died December 12, 1945 at a convocation in Memphis, Tenn.

Lizzie Robinson is referred to with esteem and praise in several texts. Some of that commentary follows. "[O]ne of the church's 'pioneering ladies'...helped...organize and structure the church."6 "[S]he laid the foundation for the women's department...She was distinguished by her gifted teaching ministry...Lizzie Robinson's brilliance as an organizer was foundational to the work of women in the denomination and set the pace for years to come."7 "No writer could do justice to the life work of this illustrious woman of God, nor of the numerous deeds of kindness done by her, nor the height of esteem in which she was held by thousands of followers. ...a woman of very high standing...an outstanding record in public service...an organizer, able to inspire and direct...one of the greatest organizers among Christian women."8

Lizzie Robinson played an important role in the early days of the Church of God in Christ at the national as well as the local level. The house at 2864 Corby Street is the only extant building remaining from her period of activity in the Church of God in Christ. The house she and her husband purchased in 1924 at 2723 North 28th Avenue no longer stands, and the frame church at 2318 North 26th Street was replaced by a concrete block church (on that site) in 1949. According to building permit records, the house at 2864 Corby Street was built in 1910. The register of deeds shows that the Bakers purchased the house in 1924, but city directories indicate that they lived in the house before the purchase and that Lizzie and Edward Robinson lived with them until 1924. The Bakers remained in that house until the 1960s.
